Directions (45-49): Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions based on the passage:

Literature and language studies open a broad spectrum of career opportunities that extend far beyond traditional teaching roles. Graduates with a background in English literature or language often find fulfilling jobs in publishing, writing, editing, media, law, and digital marketing. The skills acquired in these fields such as critical thinking, clear communication, close reading, and research, are highly valued across many industries.

In publishing, professionals work as editors, literary agents, or publicists, helping to shape books from manuscript to market. Writing careers might include authorship, technical writing, or content creation for diverse sectors, allowing individuals to craft stories, informative articles, or marketing campaigns. Editors ensure that written materials are polished and meet high standards of quality, often managing teams to produce consistent content.

Moreover, many literature graduates pursue careers in law, journalism, film, or advertising, leveraging their analytical and expressive abilities. The growing startup culture and digital economy have further expanded roles such as copywriters, social media managers, and communication specialists. These careers contribute not only to cultural enrichment but also to shaping public discourse and generating employment.

Overall, a degree in literature and language equips individuals with versatile, transferable skills, enabling them to adapt and excel in a dynamic and competitive job market.
