| 9. | Answer any one of the following two questions in 40-50 words each. | 1x3=3 |
| | I. Marquez characterizes Frau Frieda's dreams as a "stratagem for surviving." This implies that he viewed her dreams not necessarily as accurate prophecies but as a way for her to navigate and cope with the difficulties of life. Her dreams might have served as a psychological and emotional tool to provide her with a sense of purpose, hope, and direction. II. The poem opens with Coleridge describing his vision of the palace and gardens of Kubla Khan, which he envisions in intricate detail. These vivid and fantastical images are a testament to the poet's imaginative capacity to create an entire world within his mind. Rich and sensory descriptions transport the reader into the dreamlike landscape he envisions. | |

| 10. | Answer any one of the following two questions in 120-150 words each | 1x5=5 |
| | I. A K. Ramanujan's poem "Time and Time Again" primarily focuses on the cyclical nature of time and personal contemplation rather than explicitly addressing communal disharmony. Readers may find indirect or symbolic references to social and communal issues in the text. The poet explores themes related to time, memory, and the repetitive nature of existence. The poem's central concerns revolve around personal experiences, emotions, and reflections rather than overtly addressing communal disharmony. Ramanujan's primary intent appears to be the exploration of individual consciousness and the human condition. It's possible for readers to interpret the poem in a broader context and draw connections to themes of communal disharmony indirectly. For example, the cyclical nature of time and the recurrence of certain experiences could be seen as a commentary on the persistent cycles of conflict and division within societies. The idea of feeling trapped in repetitive patterns might metaphorically symbolize the inability of communities to break free from historical conflicts. II. In his essay "Film-Making," Ingmar Bergman, discusses various aspects of filmmaking and the relationship between a filmmaker and their audience. He emphasizes the importance of honesty and authenticity in the filmmaker's communication with the audience. Bergman believes that a filmmaker should use film as a means of genuine self-expression. He argues that filmmakers should create films that are deeply personal and reflective of their own thoughts, emotions, and experiences. In doing so, they establish an intimate connection with the audience by sharing their inner world. A filmmaker's work should emotionally engage the audience. He suggests that films should evoke genuine emotional responses from viewers, whether it be joy, sadness, fear, or introspection. Bergman believes that this emotional engagement is central to the filmmaker's relationship with the audience. He views filmmaking as a form of communication and dialogue between the filmmaker and the audience. He emphasizes that the filmmaker should communicate openly and honestly through their work, treating the audience as intellectual and emotional equals who can understand and appreciate the complexities of the human experience. | |
| 11. | Answer any one of the following questions in 30-40 words. Suggestive Responses I. The conflict is primarily about the clash between the human desire for control and exploitation of nature, represented by the characters of Captain and Madan, and the innate wildness and freedom of the tiger. II. Margayya's initial success as a financial expert leads to his downfall primarily through a combination of overconfidence, unethical behaviour, financial mismanagement, and a loss of support and trust from his community. His downfall was a consequence of prioritizing personal gain over ethical values and long-term financial prudence. | 1x2=2 |

| | Suggestive Responses <ol style="list-style-type: none"> I. Master, as a character, embodies a strong moral compass. He is depicted as a compassionate and ethical individual whose empathy and compassion toward Raja showcases the importance of these qualities in human interactions with animals and the natural world - Master's role as an advocate for nature and wildlife aligns with the author's intention to promote environmental awareness and conservation II. As Margayya rises in society due to his wealth and influence, readers can reflect on the idea of personal integrity versus social acceptance. Margayya gains respect and power through his financial dealings, but he loses his moral compass in the process. Margayya's eventual downfall and the consequences of his unethical actions serve as a cautionary tale. Margayya undergoes a transformation and seeks redemption. This aspect of his character's journey prompts readers to consider the possibility of change and redemption even after a life marked by unethical conduct. | |
| 13. | Answer any one of the following questions in 120-150 words. Suggestive Responses <ol style="list-style-type: none"> I. The novel explores the complex and often fraught relationship between humans and animals, highlighting the cruelty and mistreatment that animals can face at the hands of humans. Through its personification of Raja, the novel validates the experiences and emotions of animals who are too often neglected by their captors, promoting cultures of nonviolence between humans and animals. Tiger's idyllic, natural life is brutally interrupted when hunters kill all of Raja's cubs. By demonstrating Raja's profound grief at the loss of his children, Narayan encourages the reader to think of tigers as creatures with emotions not so different from our own. Through the stark juxtaposition between Raja's life in the wild and in captivity, Narayan encourages the reader to treat animals as fellow creatures with all the wants, needs, and feelings that we have and to ultimately let them be free in the wild. II. In R.K. Narayan's novel "The Financial Expert," the evolution of Margayya's character from his early success as a moneylender to his ultimate downfall is a central narrative arc that explores the consequences of his actions on both a personal and societal level. This transformation is marked by several key factors. Initially, Margayya's character is introduced as an intelligent and ambitious individual living in poverty in the town of Malgudi. His early success begins when he cleverly manipulates the financial transactions of his clients, exploiting their vulnerability and financial need. His acumen as a moneylender leads to rapid financial success, and he becomes a prominent figure in the community. Margayya's downfall is marked by a series of personal and societal consequences. His unethical practices alienate him from the community, eroding the trust and goodwill he initially enjoyed. His obsession with wealth causes him to neglect his family, leading to strained relationships with his wife and son. Margayya faces legal troubles and becomes entangled in legal disputes due to his fraudulent activities. Ultimately, he loses his wealth, social standing, and even his sense of self-worth. | 1X5=5 |
