Direction (Q. Nos. 71 to 77) : These questions are based on the following passage. Read it carefully. Pick the most appropriate answer from the options given after each question.

Across the world, there are barriers to higher education. In developed countries, they may be economic or geographical. In developing countries like India, the obstacles are not only economic or geographical in nature but also bureaucratic — the biggest obstacle of all is simply a lack of supply. That is why, far from the popular impression of online education being viable only in the developed world, it is actually in countries like India where it can fulfil its potential. Internet penetration is growing at a steady pace in India — and unlike conventional education where physical infrastructure is a huge limiting factor, internet connectivity alone can enable millions of youth to access quality higher education online. And we have concrete proof that Indians are hungry for such opportunities. They form the second largest group of people, by nationality, accessing two of the largest online education efforts — Coursera and edX. It is not surprising after all that an Indian would be interested in the quality courses these initiatives offer, or access Ivy League lectures online, or download podcasts by professors from the top global universities, all of which are freely available. With the abysmal situation of India's higher education, online education will free our youth to search for knowledge and power elsewhere.

71. The focus of this passage is on _____

- (A) higher education in India
- (B) online education for Indian students
- (C) coursera and edX
- (D) poor accessibility of higher education

Direction (Q. Nos. 96 to 100) : These questions are based on the following passage. Read it carefully. Pick the most appropriate and contextually apt answer from the options given after each question.

Rather than saying that little boys and little girls, from the very start, learn two different ways of speaking, I think that the process is more complicated. Since the mother and other women are dominant influences in the lives of most children under the age of 5, probably both boys and girls first learn 'women's language' as their first language. As they grow older, boys especially go through a stage of rough talk ; this is probably discouraged in little girls more strongly than in little boys, in whom parents may often find it more amusing than shocking. By the time children are 10 or so, and split up into same-sex peer groups, the two languages are already present, according to my recollections and observations. But it seems that what has happened is that the boys have unlearned their original form of expression and adopted new forms of expression, while the girls retain their old ways of speech. The ultimate result is the same, of course; whatever the interpretation.

So a girl is damned if she does, damned if she doesn't. If she refuses to talk like a lady, she is ridiculed and subjected to criticism as unfeminine; if she does learn, she is ridiculed as unable to think clearly, unable to take part in a serious discussion: in some sense, as less than fully human. These two choices which a woman has — to be less than a woman or less than a person — are highly painful.

96. "By the time children are 10 or so....."

What does this phrase suggest?

- (A) Approximately
- (B) Appropriately
- (C) Or above
- (D) Or below

97. "..... in whom parents may often find it more amusing than shocking."

Who does the author mean here?

- (A) Little boys

- (C) By reading the line following this statement
- (D) By reading between the lines

99. Are the "two choices" mentioned in the last line real choices for women? Explain.

- (A) Yes. They have the freedom to exercise the less painful choice.

- (B) Yes. They have the freedom to exercise the more beneficial choice.
- (C) No. They have no real choice either way.
- (D) No. They must feel painful always.

100. What we learn from this passage, is that

- (A) Boys and girls learn to speak different languages because of norms widely accepted by a society.

- (B) Boys and girls learn to speak different languages because they are so conditioned biologically.

- (C) Boys and girls are not able to understand one another because they speak different languages.

- (D) Boys and girls do understand one another despite the different languages they speak.
