Q.1 Sir, now I am raising the issue of the present method of election. Here, representatives are directly elected from constituencies. It is good, but we have seen some developments which are not so good for our democracy. Sometimes, an agitation is held as a result of which very small number of people vote. So, those who are elected to the Assembly hardly represent a small fraction of people because the system is such that if you get single vote more than the candidate behind you, you will get elected. Such a situation should not be there in the interest of the democracy. A very big controversy is going on in India about the reservation of seats for women in Parliament and State Assemblies. Everybody is supporting this view in principle. A very few people are against it. Actually, they are not against it, but they say that it should be reformed a little bit more. But we could not do that so far. My suggestion is that in our country, half of the total seats should be reserved for women. Then, without any problem of cast, religion or money, they can be elected. Money power is curbing the deserving people who are socially and politically active and who are useful to the society. We have seen that educated women are coming in the forefront to contribute their effort because there is a new opportunity open to them, which was not there earlier. Once the opportunity has been opened up to them, the educated and socially committed women are coming forward to take up the responsibility of working in these local bodies. Here, I would like to give an example of Kerala state because I can talk with confidence about Kerala. We found that these women are more dedicated to the cause to which they are elected today. They are more sincere. Various studies have concluded that they are less corrupt. Sir, now I am raising the issue of the present method of election. Q.1 What is important is not what has happened but what we are doing now to solve these problems. Government has done a great deal during the last one or two years and I am glad to say that production had steadily improved. The capacity utilization in the steel section is seventy per cent as against sixty per cent earlier and this will go up to eighty per cent this year. In fact an improvement is evident in most public enterprises.

Q.1 I am happy to be here in your midst to inaugurate this session of the Indian Labour Conference. This is truly a historic forum. After Independence, some of our great leader chaired several sessions of the Indian Labour Conference. The importance was attached by our national leaders to this forum was due to the fact that our national movement recognised, from the very inception, the central role of the working class in national development. The working class is like the blood that flows through our veins. Our economy functions because of the toil and energy of the working people of our country. Let there be no doubt about our commitment to the critical role of our working classes in carrying forward the process of social and economic change. Leaders of the trade unions have referred to several issues. I do not have the time to respond to each one of them. But I have taken note of the views that have been expressed that a falling interest rate does reduce the returns to individual and can cause hardship to the people at the lower rung of social and economic ladder. But, all I can say at this moment is that I will have to discuss this matter with the Labour Minister, with the concerned officials, to examine to see what can be done on this matter within the resources. As regards regular exchange of views with the trade unions, I do recognise that there has been some omissions on the part of the Government. We will seek to correct that. I do regard the trade unions as an integral part of our function. I think we will try to make up for past deficiency. Friends, I know that it is easier said than done. But it has to be done. The soil of this nation has quality. It gives an opportunity for everyone to thrive on. If there are any impediments, these must be removed. It is good that you are paying attention to education. Education is an asset for development for progress. Education has been neglected. We became independent. But primary education was not made compulsory. Had it been compulsory, everyone would have to go to school and study. But we thought it was a trivial issue, what difference does it make whether a child studies or not. If a child is not educated, he could work as labourer.
