Comprehension:

Read the given passage and answer the questions that follow.

Mark Nepo, philosopher and spiritual teacher, says, "We are continually asked to learn how to ask for what we need, only to practise accepting what we are given". He compares surrender to when a fish swims with the river's current and acceptance to when that fish runs into a rock, accepts it and embraces obstacles that the rock represents. Hardships are there to propel us towards growth. Om Swami says that most of us have made surrender a joke. We have a notion of how we want to be saved. He illustrates his point with a story. A man was driving on a windy road in the hills when his car toppled over while making a short turn. He tumbled out of his car as it fell into a deep gorge. Miraculously, on his way down, he managed to grab a branch of a tree. The tree was old, thin and weak. The man called out to God with the greatest fervour. No reply came, and the tree was crumbling to the second. He did not give up and called out again a few times. A few minutes later, a roaring voice broke out of the sky.<sup>164</sup>

Comprehension:

Read the given passage and answer the questions that follow.

Mark Nepo, philosopher and spiritual teacher, says, "We are continually asked to learn how to ask for what we need, only to practise accepting what we are given". He compares surrender to when a fish swims with the river's current and acceptance to when that fish runs into a rock, accepts it and embraces obstacles that the rock represents. Hardships are there to propel us towards growth. Om Swami says that most of us have made surrender a joke. We have a notion of how we want to be saved. He illustrates his point with a story. A man was driving on a windy road in the hills when his car toppled over while making a short turn. He tumbled out of his car as it fell into a deep gorge. Miraculously, on his way down, he managed to grab a branch of a tree. The tree was old, thin and weak. The man called out to God with the greatest fervour. No reply came, and the tree was crumbling to the second. He did not give up and called out again a few times. A few minutes later, a roaring voice broke out of the sky.<sup>164</sup>
