'The Magic of Water' by Laurie Lee

I discovered water at the age of four, at the mouth of our cottage pump. I remember it not as a thing for merely washing and scrubbing, but as a plaything with a brilliant life of its own. One could pump it in pure gulps out of the ground, and it came out sparkling like liquid sky. It broke or ran, or quivered in a jug, or weighted one's clothes with cold. I found you could drink it, draw with it, swim beetles across it, or fly it in bubbles in the air. You could bury your head in it, and open your eyes, and see the old bucket buckle, and hear your caught breath roar, and smell the sharp lime from the ground. It was a plaything of magic, which you could confine or scatter but never destroy. Perhaps none of us loses that early passion for water, for we are bound to it by ancestral cords. The sight and sound of it cures our minds, and most of our pleasure seems to be ordered around it. When we wallow in our baths, is it just to get clean, I wonder, or is the pleasure something deeper than that, an indulgent return to the weightless peace of the womb, or to the warm shallow lapping of those primeval seas where all life is said to have begun?
