The elephant is the largest of all living animals and the strongest. It is a strange-looking animal, with its thick legs, huge sides and back, large hanging ears, small tail, little eyes, long white tusks and above all, its long nose, called trunk. The trunk is the elephant's unique feature, and it puts it to various uses. It draws up water by its trunk and can squirt it all over its body like a shower bath; and with it, it picks leaves from the trees and puts them into its mouth. In fact, its trunk serves the elephant as a long arm and hand. Elephants look very clumsy and heavy, and yet they can move very quickly when they like. Elephants are found in India and in Africa. The African elephant differs in some points from the Indian counterpart, being larger, with longer tusks and bigger ears. In fact, the two are considered to be different species. In both countries, they live in herds in the jungles and are naturally shy animals who keep away from humans. Elephants with their great size and strength, are fine advertisement for vegetarianism, for they live entirely on leaves of trees, grass, roots and bulbs. The elephant is a very intelligent animal, and its intelligence combined with its great strength, makes it when tamed, a very useful servant to man, and it has been trained to serve in various ways.

Read the given passage and answer the questions that follow.

The developing USA experienced several transformations during the 19th century. Supporters of more liberal religious practices questioned the faith in the dominant Puritan Calvinism. The struggle for reformation was put in front of the educational system. The entire country was experiencing economic change and industrialisation shot to the top of the political agenda. The market economy began to give way to the capitalist economy. In other words, people encountered changes everywhere. Older value systems were unable to give individuals the security they required. Through the gaping vacuum, Transcendentalism is a new movement that made its way into the consciousness of America. Though discussions of transcendentalism had started in the early 1800s, the dominant religion at the time was Unitarianism, which emphasised spirituality and enlightenment through reason, knowledge and logic. Young men who were studying Unitarianism and disagreed with these beliefs started meeting informally. At Harvard University, where many of the earliest transcendentalists studied, Unitarianism played a particularly significant role in everyday life. Ralph Waldo Emerson planned the group's first gathering known as the Transcendental Club in September 1836. The group collaborated to examine the issues related to Unitarianism and its fundamental beliefs, finding influences from Romanticism, German thinkers, the Upanishads and a selection of Hindu religious texts.

Read the given passage and answer the questions that follow.

The developing USA experienced several transformations during the 19th century. Supporters of more liberal religious practices questioned the faith in the dominant Puritan Calvinism. The struggle for reformation was put in front of the educational system. The entire country was experiencing economic change and industrialisation shot to the top of the political agenda. The market economy began to give way to the capitalist economy. In other words, people encountered changes everywhere. Older value systems were unable to give individuals the security they required. Through the gaping vacuum, Transcendentalism is a new movement that made its way into the consciousness of America.
