Directions : Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions - 23, 24 and 25, given below in the context of the passage

The use of magic and religion to cure illness were widespread in ancient Egypt. The effectiveness was most likely due to the placebo effect - that is, people felt well just because they believed that incantations and magical ingredients were effective.

Ingredients were sometimes selected because the ingredient had a characteristic that in some way corresponded to a symptom of the patient. An Ostrich egg, for example, was included in the treatment of a broken skull.

Amulets were often worn for magical purposes. One amulet, representing the girdle of Isis, was intended to stem the flow of blood at miscarriage.

23. The "placebo effect" :

- (A) is a pill that makes a person feel better.
- (B) treats the symptoms of the patient.
- (C) treats a broken skull.
- (D) helps a patient feel better because of the patient's belief.

Work itself is a very important factor in motivating a person. A person tends to perform a task more enthusiastically if that work affords more satisfaction than the other work. A person's satisfaction out of work is more if it is more need-satisfying. A man seeks something from work and if he gets more satisfaction from a particular work, he will be prone to do that work better or harder. There are incentives for work; these can be financial or non - financial. People like missionaries and some scientists do not work basically for material gains as such. A person wants to do a work which is personally meaningful.
